upon their arrival, to be placed in quarantine for not less toria. They could not get men to work on their fields because there was a tax of two shillings per month, which the men could not pay—they could not get out of the country to work for other men, and so they sold their own gold fields and went to Victoria. (Upson.)

Q. Did you vote against Cooper? With reference to the matter of the gold fields, perhaps he could explain that matter.

A. Donaldson had pledged himself before he thought Cooper was a candidate for the seat. Mr. Donaldson had pledged himself to Mr. Fraser, (Mr. Fraser, no.) Would they have an honest man, after pledging himself, come and vote the other way. (Upson.)

Q. Cooper was the first man to go to Victoria. Was he going to vote against him, and Mr. Donaldson told him that he was the second man he told it to?

A. Yes, he would appeal to two or three gentlemen whether Donaldson had not told them that he could not go to Victoria to get the gold fields. (Upson.)

Q. Was it the fact that he was pledged to Mr. Fraser, and Mr. Donaldson was waiting for this election?

A. All that Mr. Donaldson wanted was a clear stage and no favour. (Upson.)

Q. Did you go to the poll with the greatest confidence?

and tried to the impartiality of the electors of the United States to return him. He was sorry to see that the friends of the country were not so true to him as he would have wished, but he would say to them as well as to those who were not his countrymen, that he thought it would be for them if they put the right man in the right place. (Applause.) Do not let any party feeling or local opposition influence your choice. I am, I think, the first wish of their hearts be "Advance the right man to these few remarks he had much pleasure in giving the nomination of Stuart Alexander Donnell." (Loud cheers.)

Mr. LANS then, came forward amid loud cheering, shouting, and cries of "Don't be frightened, Doctor, you are going to preach us a sermon, and you have the honor to appear before them to-day to propose a fit and proper person to represent them, John Humphreys, of Wharf." (Loud cheers.) Before he said anything further or to say that he would consent to a false and unjust statement that had been put forth by the other side, namely, that Mr. John Combs was his nominee. (Loud laughter and applause.)

At a numerous meeting of the society, the emergency of the case, a meeting which he did not attend, a person whom he did not know proposed to Mr. Campbell as a fit and proper person to represent the society, and Mr. Campbell, who is a Quaker, and no other gentlemen had been named before, but some of them declined coming forward, both Quakers and members of the old Legislative Council, and the offer was found did not carry with him the liberal portion of the community. (The speaker then said, "I am saying your prayers, Doctor.") As proposed, a person saying Mr. J. Campbell was asked to come forward, he combined the opinions of the liberals. (A black man here, and another, mounted an omnibus in front of the hall, and shouting, "Hurry up, hurry up," he amused himself by kissing his hand to the speaker, at that meeting a deputation was accordingly proposed to wait on Mr. Campbell, and it was not till they were waiting on Mr. Campbell that they called on him, and asked him to co-operate with them in the cause of temperance. (Campbell is sick.) He agreed to do so with his heart, and also attended three meetings of the

"I am not a candidate for the election," said Mr. Campbell, "and I do not intend to stir up strife" [at the time the numerous negroes were crying out for the election of a coloured man]. "I am not a candidate for a seat in the Legislature." He believed that not one of the members for the city was more connected with bringing forward a coloured man than himself. Three cheers for Douglass, three cheers for the "Beecher," and three for the "doctor." He referred to this fact to prove that Mr. Campbell was not the nominee of himself or of the "Beecher," all that to the marines. It was in accordance with the wish of the "Beecher" and the "doctor" that Mr. Campbell came forward. (No, no; no uproar; it was not intended to-morrow by his being placed at the head of poll. "Where is the money Lord Guderich gave to the 'Beecher'?" The Sydney Morning Herald had reported that Mr. Douglass had been elected. It was well known that that journal is always on the lookout for every counter for popular rights and privileges they are always been against the popular candidate. So strongly is that paper engaged on the other side that it would not even do the justice of publishing a speech in favour of Mr. Campbell. [It was not

with his Mr. Silvester, that young man who, among all the army akimbo at the working of the machine, was not a staff gun to be sent off in Australia. "I serve him right," I thought, as he stood with head leaning on his hand like Patience on a monument smiling at Grief. (Laughter.) He supposed that Freeman was humming to himself the old Scotch song of George Buchanan's, "The gude man and the gude woman" were one of transcendent importance. But he had not any such minor question as who should be the representative of any particular district, but who would be the Prime Minister. (Uproar.) The matter was settled. It was to be the representative of the Sydney Hamlets—"That is point, Dr."—but who was to be the Prime Minister. (Donaldson for ever, and cheer.) The question was what policy could they expect from the Prime Minister. Donaldson said that if they considered that Mr. Donaldson was unfit to represent them. "No," and groans, and "Do you call Campbell a good candidate?" He did, from his personal principles, again and again, on the two great the proper apportionment of the lands. (Uproar.) Campbell was in favour of the equalisation of representation and the proper disposal of the public lands, as, for instance, the population of the city of Sydney and the Sydney Harbour, the latter being the centre of the whole of the colony, and what proportion they were representatives? They had one quarter of the population, and nearly half of the wealth, and yet they had only one representative (applause of the members.) This infamous distribution of the representatives was voted for by Mr. Donaldson. The question was decided in 1851, and Mr. Donaldson then sent against 6 members for the City of Sydney, and 10 members for the Sydney Harbour and Manly. Let us have something new—read us some extracts of your books.” To whom were they indebted for the infamous Electoral Act of 1851? To Mr. Donaldson. (Uproar.) Mr. Donaldson was opposed to the proper representation of the Sydney Harbour, and even when the Government of the day proposed to divide the county of Cumberland Mr. Donaldson voted against it. (Uproar.)—Give us

They are not only required to consider Mr. Donaldson's qualifications personally, but they had to weigh in the balance the Donaldson Ministry. Now, what was to be the result? The answer would be found in the government of this colony. If they looked at the public papers they would read the repeated declaration of Mr. Donaldson agreed entirely with Mr. Thomson. The late Colonial Secretary, even in political opinions, was what was wanted, and would be found in the Donaldson Ministry. Mr. James Macarthur, a gentleman who had been the soul of this Ministry, was the personification of antagonism to popular interests. He proposed the reason this gentleman had been appointed was that he gave a sharp answer to a question put to this Ministry. It was sufficient for the detractors of the 8 days Hamlets ('To put in the best of us') to know that the staunch supporters of Mr. Donaldson were the Sydney Morning Herald and the Sydney Freeman's Journal, and to prove to them that he was not the man they should elect. Whatever they might think of the character of the Upper House, it was the door, the only proper mode of entrance, and they had climbed up and entered the office. It was a serious violation of their rights and liberties, the way which the office had been taken by the first responsible ministry of New South Wales. He trusted they would be ready, as he doubted not they would, to pass their resolutions of condemnation on the whole false testimony of the press. The electors of Sydney Hamlet are required on the present emergency to choose as their representative a thoroughly honest man. (Cheerful applause for ever.) A man not a brilliant orator, but a good speaker, but one who had always voted on the right side, and for the interests of the people. (Cheers.) He trusted that the electors would choose him for his part, in accordance with the opinion of the numerous committee who have called on Mr. Campbell and who had been of opinion that Mr. Campbell was the right man to elect as their representative.

He referred to the Ministerial programme, and went through the different clauses contained in it, scrutinising each of them with the most minute care. He alluded to the grounds and reasons on which it had been framed. He glowed most temperately to his friend Mr. John Campbell, his only opponent, for whom he expressed the warmest feelings of friendship. He made only one regret that his virtuous inopulence had permitted himself to be made a cat-in-paw, from his appearance on the hustings that day, and a tool by a party which he disapproved. He was, however, allowed to use his full power to pull out the nuts for them. He believed in a triumphant majority in his favour, but begged that every vote should be counted. He begged that the votes of the middle class and those votes would prove to the world he did not go by the backstairs but by the right door into the political sheepfold. He pledged himself to this, that he would not be a party to any compromise with that majority of which he was now confident, if Mr. Cowper went into the Ministry, and therefore asked to go back to his constituency, and would not be a party to any compromise which would then likely happen, he (Mr. C.) would then be defeated for the city by a larger majority than Mr. Donaldson was for the Hamlets.

Questions relative to taxation and the land question were then put by several of the electors, and answered

Mr. ALLARDICE said: If I was the friend of Mr. Donaldson, and if I were an orator I might plead for him with silver tongue; I only address you as a friend of this great country. The principle of this election has not been fully explained: Mr. Donaldson, with that manliness and independence which is the characteristic of his nature, has stated that he will only accept of votes in this election to accomplish his return not as a contest between man and man—between Mr. Campbell and himself. The electors in this election have another view of the case to take altogether. The question was then between Ministry and Ministry—between a Germanist and no Government at all. In fact, Mr. Donaldson, with that counting-house knowledge in which he is deeply read, has picked out for his Ministry nearly all the working talent of the country. To talk at the present moment of a Ministry beyond his Ministry is an utter delusion, for the country does not possess it.

RICHARD HILL, Esq., moved, "That Stuart Alexander Donaldson, Esq., was a fit and proper person to receive the Sydney Hamlets" which was duly seconded.

THE CHAIRMAN put the question, which was carried by acclamation.

MR. DONALDSON moved, "That the thanks of the meeting to H. H. Browne, Esq., for his conduct in the chair given;" which was duly seconded and carried unanimously.

Captain M. MORGARTY then addressed the meeting; after which it separated.

THE CONFERENCE.—The Paris correspondent of the Times says:—"It is conjectured here that Prussia is merely invited to take part in the conference, and that the Emperor will not be personally present in view of a witness a dead, and which only wants that Prussia should be invited to take part in the conference. The invitation addressed to Prussia is, therefore, a mere form, the existence of her inserting any obligation that the conference may be longer a discussion, and that the conference the continuance of war are removed, and that, in a word, it exists."

So another condemn his loss on a hemp transaction; $36,000; he would have been ruined if it had not been paid close on time. He was obliged to reimburse the party who closed on £20,000. When we first brought the frauds and forgery to the attention of the public, we were told that the man who was member for Sligo before the surprise, we estimated their amount at £100,000. We have now seen an announcement from him which will create almost as great surprise as our first—which is that he has sold the whole of his estate, comprising 17,000 acres, his earthly career by his own hand, on Monday week, after closing with obligations to the enormous extent of £1,000,000. And he has done so, without having been able to raise more than £200,000. He committed, in the short space of four days to five years.—Belfast Advertiser.

STEAM FLOUR MILLS.—8-horse power engine and mill, pair of 4 foot French burr stones, with dressing and sifting complete, weight about 64 tons. £615.
12-h. p. ditto, 2 pairs, &c., weight 9 tons £ 950
12-h. p. ditto, 4 ditto, &c., weight 11 tons £1150
12-h. p. ditto, 4 ditto, &c., weight 11 tons £1150
25-h. p. ditto, 5 ditto, &c., weight 18 tons £2115

The above machinery, guaranteed complete, delivered in London or elsewhere, freight free. It is supplied for the erection of mill and machinery. A patent can be obtained which can be supplied with any of the above for a further sum of £250.

From the great expense charged (£2 per horse power extra).

As the above machinery is made in England, it is available in manufacturing flour in all machinery, having within the last two years fitted upwards of 45 pairs of millstones in New South Wales and New Zealand. As they are enabled to supply much more rapidly than the wants of the colonies than can possibly be imported by any other house not practically conversant with the business; and weight being a consideration, the above machinery is constructed as light as great, the above machinery is constructed as light as possible, consistent with due strength and efficiency.

For the above coming festive, M. J. and CO. beg to state that they have on hand an immense quantity of dress materials of the latest fashion, and of surpassing beauty and elegance.

They have also just opened several packages of the most elegant West of England cloth, and are, owing to a variety of reasons, enabled to offer the most eminent London cutters, prepared to make up clothing to measure, in a manner perfectly fit, and at a most judicious and gentlemanly price.
